NORWOULDN'T VILLAGE LIFE IN INDIANA.

[Continued.] CHAPTER IX-AN INDIANA SUNDAY. There was no sound in the village orchard a stealin' apples. I reckon it's street, look either way-not a vehicle; Ca'holic pictur. It's a mighty plous or not a human being. Nobody was up anyhow.

"Scratch out, Llly," sald Martha Keziah at an early honr. "It's Sunday, and I want to get through, and go to Gamus to meetin' time to see all the vonngsters."

The second bell rang. Its notes came loud and sweet through the stil air. Nara-"Everybody was a goin'," the hired girl said. Martha Keziah, the schoolmaster, his wife and Lily, moved down the road. The meeting to-day was at Gamus cross roads, nearly a mile out of town, but the beauty of the day and the preaching brought out everybody, and soon and young, men and girls and children, filled the road, walking, as was the schoolmaster's family, or riding in wood wagons, on mules, on horseback; some few in spring wagons, and the rear brought up by Deacon Soap-Traumatic Telanae.

Deacon Soapstone held in his ambitious mules when he perceived the schoolmaster leaving his gate, so that he might easily hold converse with him upon a matter of importance which filled his mind.

"Mornin' brother Special Special

"Mornin', brother Spentworth; hopethe Lord's day finds you with refreshin' experiences. The Lord's been over good to me. But have you heard about that diagraceful singin' school rumpus?"
"No! Why, I wonder!" broke in Mrs.
Deacon. "Why some outrageous limbs of the airth went down to the Willer Branch singin' meetin' and Jis' broke it up with a disturbance. That ptaguy ras-

"Don't call no names, Nancy." "Don't call no names, Nancy."

"That plaguy rascal, Tom Grayson, was at the head and front of it, but assoon na he saw how things was like to go, off he gallops on that their racer of his 'n, and proves a alumbi in court. That he goes now, a gallopin' like mad. His devilment will bring his poor mother's gray hairs in acrow to the grave, if she hadn't lived to see what a nice young man he is she sot up so with his store hats on his feet, and shoes on his head every day"—

"But, brother," Deacon hastened to say, "I hev now great hopes of that thar young man, that he will steady himself. I think I can discern a more plouser speriet a growing within him. I hope and trust that the many prayers offered up for him will not be in vain. and sarre the Lord as you cert to, jist do and sarre the Lord as you cert to, jist do and do."

The good beacon now whipped up his mules and soon joined the ranks of riders, leaving the schoolmaster's family and other plodding walkers far in the rear. Soon the picturesque procession of vehicles reached the church, Mrs. a psicone, after many cautiousry injunctions to the reacon concerning the care of the team of the limit of his contribution in church, asiled up the aisle looking in her many capes and strings and handkerchiefs, like a ship in full rigging. She took her accustomed seat on the front bench, just under the preachers' nose, but in such a position as to command the view of both aisles. She carried in her hand always a turkey-wing fan, and as the people came in who were strangers or hestaut, or in whom she took an interest, she would fump up, and stretching out the turkey-wing fan, and as the people came in who were strangers or hestaut, or in whom she took an interest, she would wave it for a moment in greatest uncertainty, and then with a violent swoop, would point to a seat. After each such benevo.ent exertion, shaking herself and amouthing out herself, and settling down for the next comer. Next she would take out her fiannel starch bag and beat herself over the forehead and nose and cheek with it—had not flashes she said.

JANUARY STREET LINE OF STREET LINE O The volume of trade during the past week has been light in every department. This stagnation is in a large measure owing to the condition of the river; with a rice business would at once revive. There are large quantities of cotton, to bacco, grain and other products that only await resumption of navigation to find their way alone to this market.

The provision market has deelind during the week. The demand has been light and stocks are reduced. The near approach of the slaughtering season has the effect of weakening prices, as also the short of the resumptions.
